Martha Wash

About

Martha Wash has a voice that made millions dance. She is a two-time Grammy nominated American R&B, pop, soul, and house singer, record producer, songwriter, activist and music industry executive with a career spanning over thirty years. As one-half of the duo Two Tons O' Fun – later the Weather Girls – she sang with the legendary Sylvester and recorded the enduring multi-platinum hit "It's Raining Men." Wash quickly rose to become the Queen of Clubland, with 13 songs peaking at Number One on the Billboard Dance charts. In the 1990s she spurred legislation that made vocal credits mandatory on CDs and music videos after being denied proper credit (and royalties) for C+C Music Factory's anthem "Gonna Make You Sweat", and Black Box's "Strike It Up" and "Everybody, Everybody." During this era Wash was the Midas of dance music, with eight songs featuring her vocals reaching Number One on the international pop/dance charts. Wash remains active as a touring and recording artist, and in 2015, she produced First Ladies Of Disco's Top 10 Billboard dance single "Show Some Love", which was released on her own label Purple Rose Records.

Rolling Stone Magazine

Martha Wash: The Most Famous Unknown Singer of the '90s Speaks Out

"Martha's latest album breaks new ground as an uplifting adult-contemporary compilation. The album's title track, "Something Good," is quite a toe tapper. With only eight songs, the album may not have all the usual gimmicks, bells or whistles, but don't let Martha undersell it. Something Good is really something wonderful."

— Huffington Post

"Martha Wash, an industry pioneer. Her new music 'Something Good', is a positive, and inspirational album"

— Rolling Stone Magazine

"Martha Wash Turns It Out on Her Surprising New CD, Something Good", and as usual, her voice has a purity that's very unique and affecting--she's one of the best vocalists in the biz. The result is really fine stuff that deserves high chart places.
